ONE BILLION RISING CAMPAIGN
Students highlight injustice against women

MEGHNA MALIK
 CHANDIGARH, FEBRUARY 8

THIS YEAR, the Chandigarh chapter of a global campaign against sexual harassment of women has started from the Post Graduate Government College for Girls, Sector 42.

As a part of One Billion Rising campaign, founded by activist Eve Ensler in 2012, more than 250 girls assembled last week to raise their voice against female infanticide, dowry, sexual abuse, sex slavery and female genital mutilation. They organised a flash mob and through active campaigning, shared stories of injustice done against women. They also highlighted the December 2012 gang rape incident in New Delhi and strongly spoke about the government's responsibility in creating safer public places for women.

The One Billion Rising campaign is a call out to women and men across the world to step out of their homes to raise their voice against sexual harassment of women. Through a series of flash mobs aiming to spread the idea of ending violence against women, the movement has now gained momentum in 205 countries across the world, including India. Since the beginning of the movement, men, women and children and plays to shed light on the subject. New renditions of literature pieces were also created by the women to eliminate ideas that propagate misogyny," said Jyoti Seth from Sanjh Jagori.

Mobilising students from Panjab University and its affiliated colleges, the Chandigarh community has been an active participant with the hope of creating a violence-free city for women. "The idea is simple. We gather people from different spheres and ask them to dance. Dance for women safety, dance for protection of women and their bodies, dance to create a revolution," a volunteer from Sanjh Jagori said.

Over 300 students danced and raised slogans in support of "Revolution 2016: To rise for change and equality". The Sanjh Jagori team is now planning to hold another awareness drive on February 10 at different locations in the city to take forward the revolution.

Rishika Gaur, a student of Panjab University who has been actively involved in the Chandigarh Rising Campaign for the past two years, said: "The One Billion Rising campaign has turned out to be a strong and active global phenomenon. It has contributed a great deal in galvanising a lot of young, strong-minded individuals to stop violence against women."

across the country have stepped out of their homes and danced to end violence against women.

For the past three years, Sanjh Jagori, an organisation that works for equal rights for women, has been actively organising the Chandigarh chapter of the campaign. This year, the Chandigarh Rising campaign is centered on the theme, "Listen, Act and Rise", wherein men and women are attempting to create a platform to address the violence and everyday sexism faced by women. Flash mobs were also organised at four other locations where women spoke against the fears instilled in them because of societal pressures and attempted to create a positive atmosphere for the girl child to grow in.

"We organised flash mobs, poetry recitals
